Cleaning Up Your Own Mess: A Tale of Redemption!

Rescue Mission Treatment Planning

In this rescue mission workshop, Dr Vinay Bhide is faced with the task of reconstructing the anterior maxilla after implants have failed due to peri-implantitis. Sounds straightforward, doesn't it? It is, until it isn't! Surgical reconstruction of a deficient ridge in preparation for dental implant therapy is a successful and predictable modality of treatment. Now, superimpose a history of peri-implantitis and failed implants onto this scenario, and things aren't so linear anymore. This workshop will showcase a 47-year-old patient who had implants placed in the anterior maxilla and restored with a fixed bridge, and subsequently developed peri-implantitis after more than five years in function. The implants were lost to the disease process, leaving Dr. Bhide the formidable task of reconstructing the deficient, residual ridge for implant therapy...again! While the reconstructive surgery went well, the post-operative healing events that ensued did not. Faced with an already compromised site, which was now healing poorly. Attendees of this workshop will get an insight into surgical complications and how to deal with them effectively so the ultimate goals of esthetics and function can be achieved!

What we know now and how to predict aesthetic outcomes before you start

This lecture provides a comprehensive review of the results of anterior immediate implant placement, examining past challenges and the lessons learned from previous mistakes. It systematically outlines the current strategies being implemented to prevent recurring issues and emphasizes the importance of predicting aesthetic outcomes before beginning treatment.

A key component of the course is a hands-on session, where participants will practice placing an anterior implant in a model using a surgical guide and learn the process of temporizing the implant. Through this interactive experience, attendees will gain valuable insights into optimizing implant procedures for improved patient results.

Saving Patients' Teeth: Cracks, Resorption, etc. What your Endodontist can Save and Why

Dentists might consider some teeth with cracks, failing current-endodontics, large periapical radiolucencies, or dental trauma as unrestorable and/or doomed with a poor prognosis. This presentation will share which of these are more accurately unrestorable (fewer than many might think!), and that endodontics can save many of these teeth! Similarly, an increase in diagnosable and symptomatic teeth with cracks/craze lines or resorption (all the various types) can result in uncertainty regarding which ones should be saved.

Several cases will be reviewed showing which teeth – cracks or resorptive lesions – can be saved, and why so as to treatment plan effectively allowing the best long-term prognosis to, in turn, support your restorative dentistry. Limitations to save teeth will also be challenged so as to consider some unique inter-disciplinary treatment modalities to predictably save teeth.
